In "The Great Taking," a new documentary airing on CHD.TV, former hedge fund manager David Webb takes the audience step by step through his forensic investigation into the legal, financial and regulatory changes that have set up "the greatest crime ever contemplated … the planned confiscation of everyone's global securities assets."

Webb, author of a book by the same title, exposes the "scheme by central bankers to subjugate humanity by taking all securities, bank deposits and property financed with debt."

"Legal certainty has been established that the collateral can be taken immediately and without judicial review, by entities described in court documents as 'the protected class,'" Webb says in the film. "Even sophisticated professional investors, who were assured that their securities are 'segregated,' will not be protected."

'Collapse Is Certain'

You've seen the signs. Are we barrelling toward another Great Depression?

"Once you enter this phase, collapse is certain, and that's what was happening leading into World War I," explained David Webb, author of the book and movie "The Great Taking."… Show more

In a CHD.TV interview Saturday with Children's Heath Defense (CHD) President and CEO Mary Holland, Webb said he has been studying global financial systems and warning of a coming "Great Taking" financial collapse for more than 20 years. His decades of hedge fund experience gave him insight into money flows and systemic risks that he believes foreshadow an orchestrated crash.

Webb spent years researching historical precedents like Great Depression-era bank closures and gold confiscation to help him understand the "playbook used by powerful banking interests during times of financial turmoil."

He first noticed that money velocity rates showed how excessive money creation drives unstable economic bubbles. The mainstream news coverage during the 1990s Asian financial crisis aftermath did not fully explain the odd market movements he was seeing.

Digging deeper, Webb realized "the scale of the money creation during this period was very high." He found Federal Reserve Board activity generating over 1% of gross domestic product worth of new money in one week — "an order magnitude bigger" than annual growth rates, he said.

The massive liquidity influx was not going into the real economy, Webb said, but into "destructive things … wars… various operations that are about control."

Webb compared the state of the economy just before World War I to today's hyper-financialized economy, saying both are about "looting" in the late phase of economic bubbles, just prior to a crash.

Webb also witnessed a decade-long campaign to change commercial banking statutes and ownership definitions, state by state, that set the stage for revoking investor property rights during defaults.

"The underpinning of the entire securities infrastructure in the U.S. is the Depository Trust and Clearing Corporation, and this is the entity that was first formed to dematerialize all securities in the U.S.," Webb said.

Webb told Holland a career CIA operative with "absolutely no background and banking or finance" was involved in this project and was later made the superintendent of banks in New York state by Nelson Rockefeller.

"It's very clear that this was a CIA project," he said.

The Lehman Brothers failure during the 2008 financial crisis was "teed up" to cement new precedents allowing elite creditors to seize client assets during financial busts, Webb told Holland.

The Lehman collapse involved using client assets secured through derivatives and securitized bonds as collateral, which creditors then seized.

"The bankruptcy judge said that J.P. Morgan was under 'safe harbor' and could take the client assets" and, as one of the largest banks, it was "certainly a member of the 'protected class,'" Webb said. "And those words are used in the decision."

In Webb's view, sophisticated financial instruments promote interconnectedness and complexity in global financial markets in order to multiply collateral flows while hiding systemic risks and property rights issues.

In Webb's assessment, creating centralized pools of assets sets up the system for secured creditors to instantly seize collateral. If widespread insolvency hits, as Webb predicts will be triggered, the "protected class" of big banks and funds will take all they can while everyday investors get "only a pro-rata share of what is left."

"The main takeaway is that this will affect everyone everywhere, globally, all the way to the top of the system," Webb told Holland. "This has the potential to unite people to wind this down."

In the film, Webb said, "Central banking should be a public utility. The very idea that it should be controlled by private interests, that is the source of all the problems for humanity."

"The Great Taking" was produced by Webb and executive produced by Holocaust survivor Vera Sharav.

Webb has turned his efforts into a nonprofit project that aims to share this information worldwide. Both the documentary and the downloadable book are available for free on his website.

Central anything is the source of all of the problems for humanity especially governments.

I have been educating myself on the "what people think is right" in The Walking Dead various series. As well Can You Survive in the Wilderness Alone? series and various other Alone series are real life events documented in the late autumn into winter scenarios. Recently I watched Leaving the World Behind which echoes much of what Mr. Webb has documented for us and brings us to the crowd formation and civil wars, all constructed to take each other out. My bank in Canada already forces me to verify myself at the teller's booth even though the branch members know me. I am required to provide authentication via cell phone or provide photo ID before I can access my money. I just can't get out fast enough.

We had the pLandemic to whittle us down in numbers and weaken us. In Canada, as of the morning of November 4, 97.395% of people age 5 and up took the "highly effective" shot, 86.886% took it twice, and 51.503% took it thrice. 35,416,271 Canadians ages 5 and up have taken the "highly effective" shot at least once.

Population of Canada according to worldometer as of 10:18 am November 4 is 38,893,892. We are 0.48% of the world population.

Mr Webb gets the critical part of the Lehman bankruptcy all wrong. The customer accounts were transferred to JP Morgan in order to give customers access to their assets administered by a financially sound instituruion such as JPM. Lehman customers got 100% of their assets back via accounts with JPM and could do with those assets whatever they wanted. It was the unsecured creditors (lenders) that took a loss, only getting 41 cents on the dollar for their loans to Lehman. Webb has mischaracterized these developments.

> Actually, the critical part is whether JPM could have done something else and not gave Lehman costumers back 100% of those assets. The case validated the legal constructs that gave JPM possession of those assets and therefore discretion over them. Did Lehman customers subsequently have any property/ownership rights over those same assets which they could have enforced via a court judgment?

Thank you Children's Health Defense and author of "The Great Taking", David Rogers Webb, for informing the world's people of the individuals and groups comprising those represented in the Biblical passage: "For the love of money is the root of all evil." Once established globally, public banking (banks as public utilities) effectively destroys the root of all evil, an historic, total, economic paradigm shift of which future generations on Earth will forever express profound gratitude...

This is the third 'scary' book recommendation at CHD (after "Wuhan Cover Up" and "Controligarchs") that does not point at Who really pulls the strings. Fauci, China, Gates, Schwab, Soros, Bezos, Rockefeller?..just LOL.
Webb's inside-knowledge ability to call out the elite who control our world financial systems would have been THE single most important contribution he could have made. To paraphrase Sun Tsu: If you can't ID the bottom-line perps (and their psychological motivations), how are you ever going to defend yourself against them, let alone take them out?
BTW: if anybody wants to torture himself even more about fiat money topic,, perhaps "Secrecy World; Inside the Panama Papers, Illicit Money Networks, and the Global Elite" by Jake Bernstain may be the good extra read.

More theatre. In case anybody hasn't been paying attention over the last 10,000 years, the only information we are allowed to see is by permission. Will we ever learn.
